The climate-resilient road will have elevating embankments and other features that will help safeguard it against floods. The African Development Bank will finance the Zambia Strengthening Climate Resilience project with US$38.72 million (about K212,960). The project will reach 800 thousand people and it aims to reduce poverty and improve food security in rural communities through strengthening capacity to adapt to climate change... Zambia Daily Mail The Zambia Daily Mail is an English-language daily broadsheet newspaper published in Zambia. It is one of two state-owned papers of the Zambian government. History and operations The newspaper arose from the Central African Mail, which was bought by the government from David Astor in 1965. It was renamed the Zambian Mail and subsequently the Zambia Daily Mail in 1970. The paper soon became a mouthpiece for the government, publishing official statements and press releases, while being instructed to become an "instrument in nation building". However, this saw a decline in readership and advertising.[1] In 2005, its circulation figures were estimated to be between 10,000 and 15,000.[2] See also Journalism portal Zambia portal Communications in Zambia List of newspapers in Zambia References ^ Bourgaull, Louise Manon (1995).
